Abstract

There is an increasing concern about Food security in the arab countries as the food gap between the quantity of production and consumption of agricultural products increases.

In this study I have analysed the arabs food gap between the years 1995-2005, bringing into view the causes of food incapability and the effects of recent world trade policies on the arabs food bill and agricultural investments.

Based on my conclusions and expectations I have recomended some policies that may help in the adjustment process to the world economic changes and to reduce the arabs food gap, and accomplish food security'.
